Post-Interview Reflection Log

Do this once, tonight, with a drink you like. Then close it and take the evening off. Grading yourself all week is how a decent interview starts feeling like a failure.

COMPANY AND ROLE

DATE

PEOPLE I MET (NAMES, ROLES) — FOR THE THANK-YOU

THE GUT CHECK — CIRCLE ONE, AND ONLY ONE

●	●	●	●
it came out rough those still teach things	got there eventually	solid	proud of that Whatever you circled, you showed up and did the whole hardest part out loud, in person, in clothes. That's the part most people don't finish.

WHAT WENT BETTER THAN I EXPECTED

WHAT WAS HARDER IN PERSON THAN ON PAPER

QUESTIONS THAT SURPRISED ME

WORDS THEY USED THAT MATTERED

"Words that mattered" is a quiet gold mine: their vocabulary belongs in the thank-you note and in any next cover letter.

WHAT I STILL DON'T KNOW — AND WHERE THE ANSWER MIGHT COME FROM

THANK-YOU SENT? WHEN, AND TO WHOM

ONE THING I'LL PREP DIFFERENTLY NEXT TIME — ONE, NOT NINE.

> Every interview you finish is practice you paid for in courage — whether or not this one is the one. You're better at this today than you were on Monday, whatever today's circling says.

Then literally: put this sheet in the folder, close the folder, and go do something that isn't job hunting for the rest of the night. Rest counts as job prep too.
